The Memphis Zoo

Wilson said she was told by a high school friend from Jackson, Tenn., who worked at the Memphis Zoo that she should get involved with the operation of the facility "because it was in bad shape."

Wilson became a member of a group of about eight people that formed what was called the Breakfast Club in 1984.

"We recognized that the zoo needed to be upgraded and we were kind of self-appointed for a while.

"We found the architect, did a long-range plan for the Zoo, set up the board and started the capital campaign," she said.

"We literally worked with the architect and helped OK everything that went on the master plan, the layout. I ended up visiting about 15 zoos and was on the architectural-approval committee as we were doing the master plan."

Wilson worked for 12 years on restructuring and remodeling the zoo.

She is an honorary lifetime director of the Memphis Zoological Society.
